
Andrew Burnley

Music Service Technician

Andrew's mechanical engineering background, exceptional hand skills and an eye for detail combined with being a perfectionist has made him the highly respected instrument repairer he is today. Andrew has a remarkable ability to transfer his skills to other disciplines, and since joining WDC he has added stringed instrument repairing to his skill set. Using the personal development plan run at WDC Andrew has attended the violin making summer school in Cambridge and recently completed making his first violin.

"Andy Burnley has been repairing my own personal instruments continuously for the last thirty years, and there is no one else in the country who I would have trusted with getting them up to top condition, whilst I was a working professional musician. For the last ten years, since I took over the Instrumental Music Service here at East Renfrewshire, he has been looking after our repairs for all woodwind and brass instruments.

He is fastidious in his repairs whilst very efficient with his time and will always put himself out in an emergency to do a special repair if required. He often offers advice about the viability of a repair, and will never carry out any unnecessary repairs if he thinks it will be false economy to the authority. This advice can be invaluable with repair and purchase budgets to juggle.

He carries out the bulk of our repairs when it suits us – during the summer vacation when the schools are closed. I truly believe that West Dunbarton is incredibly lucky to have such a talented repairer as a full time employee – I am jealous!"
